

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased by 1.1 million (Office of National Statistics 2000). The number of people aged 65 and over is projected to increase to 6.5 million by 2020, and the number of people aged 75 and over to 4.5 million (Office of National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health care needs of older people, and a number of initiatives have been implemented in the UK to improve the health care of older people. These include the establishment of the Department of Health's Older People's Unit (OPU) in 1997, the Older People's Unit's (OPU) report on the health care of older people (1998), and the Older People's Unit's (OPU) report on the health care of older people (1999).

The OPU's report on the health care of older people (1998) identified a number of key issues that need to be addressed in order to improve the health care of older people. These include the need to improve the quality of care, to ensure that care is person-centred, to improve the coordination of care, to improve the training of health care professionals, and to improve the research on the health care of older people.

The OPU's report on the health care of older people (1999) identified a number of key issues that need to be addressed in order to improve the health care of older people. These include the need to improve the quality of care, to ensure that care is person-centred, to improve the coordination of care, to improve the training of health care professionals, and to improve the research on the health care of older people.

The OPU's report on the health care of older people (1999) identified a number of key issues that need to be addressed in order to improve the health care of older people. These include the need to improve the quality of care, to ensure that care is person-centred, to improve the coordination of care, to improve the training of health care professionals, and to improve the research on the health care of older people.

The OPU's report on the health care of older people (1999) identified a number of key issues that need to be addressed in order to improve the health care of older people. These include the need to improve the quality of care, to ensure that care is person-centred, to improve the coordination of care, to improve the training of health care professionals, and to improve the research on the health care of older people.

The OPU's report on the health care of older people (1999) identified a number of key issues that need to be addressed in order to improve the health care of older people. These include the need to improve the quality of care, to ensure that care is person-centred, to improve the coordination of care, to improve the training of health care professionals, and to improve the research on the health care of older people.

The OPU's report on the health care of older people (1999) identified a number of key issues that need to be addressed in order to improve the health care of older people. These include the need to improve the quality of care, to ensure that care is person-centred, to improve the coordination of care, to improve the training of health care professionals, and to improve the research on the health care of older people.

The OPU's report on the health care of older people (1999) identified a number of key issues that need to be addressed in order to improve the health care of older people. These include the need to improve the quality of care, to ensure that care is person-centred, to improve the coordination of care, to improve the training of health care professionals, and to improve the research on the health care of older people.