

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1998 (Department of Health 1999). The number of people employed in the health sector has increased by 1.2 million, from 2.2 million in 1980 to 3.4 million in 1998.

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the quality of care and services provided by the public sector. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the introduction of the Health Service Act 1999, the establishment of the National Health Service Commissioning Board, and the introduction of the Health Service Quality Improvement Framework. These initiatives are aimed at improving the quality of care and services provided by the public sector, and at ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population.

The Health Service Act 1999 is a landmark piece of legislation that has a number of key provisions. These include the introduction of the National Health Service Commissioning Board, the introduction of the Health Service Quality Improvement Framework, and the introduction of the Health Service Financial Framework. These provisions are aimed at improving the quality of care and services provided by the public sector, and at ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population.

The National Health Service Commissioning Board is a new body that has been established to commission and pay for health services. It is responsible for ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population, and for ensuring that the public sector is able to provide high quality care and services. The Health Service Quality Improvement Framework is a framework that is aimed at improving the quality of care and services provided by the public sector. It is a framework that is based on the principles of patient safety, quality of care, and patient experience.

The Health Service Financial Framework is a framework that is aimed at ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population, and that the public sector is able to provide high quality care and services. It is a framework that is based on the principles of financial sustainability, efficiency, and effectiveness. The Health Service Act 1999 is a landmark piece of legislation that has a number of key provisions. These include the introduction of the National Health Service Commissioning Board, the introduction of the Health Service Quality Improvement Framework, and the introduction of the Health Service Financial Framework.

These provisions are aimed at improving the quality of care and services provided by the public sector, and at ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population. The Health Service Act 1999 is a landmark piece of legislation that has a number of key provisions. These include the introduction of the National Health Service Commissioning Board, the introduction of the Health Service Quality Improvement Framework, and the introduction of the Health Service Financial Framework. These provisions are aimed at improving the quality of care and services provided by the public sector, and at ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population.

The Health Service Act 1999 is a landmark piece of legislation that has a number of key provisions. These include the introduction of the National Health Service Commissioning Board, the introduction of the Health Service Quality Improvement Framework, and the introduction of the Health Service Financial Framework. These provisions are aimed at improving the quality of care and services provided by the public sector, and at ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population. The Health Service Act 1999 is a landmark piece of legislation that has a number of key provisions. These include the introduction of the National Health Service Commissioning Board, the introduction of the Health Service Quality Improvement Framework, and the introduction of the Health Service Financial Framework.

These provisions are aimed at improving the quality of care and services provided by the public sector, and at ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population. The Health Service Act 1999 is a landmark piece of legislation that has a number of key provisions. These include the introduction of the National Health Service Commissioning Board, the introduction of the Health Service Quality Improvement Framework, and the introduction of the Health Service Financial Framework. These provisions are aimed at improving the quality of care and services provided by the public sector, and at ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population.

The Health Service Act 1999 is a landmark piece of legislation that has a number of key provisions. These include the introduction of the National Health Service Commissioning Board, the introduction of the Health Service Quality Improvement Framework, and the introduction of the Health Service Financial Framework. These provisions are aimed at improving the quality of care and services provided by the public sector, and at ensuring that the public sector is able to meet the needs of the population.